An Eastern Opinion of Western Farmers

"To suggest that the farmer of the west is going into wheat bootlegging by wholesale and then break up the Pool he created, is to suggest that the western farmer is a weber and a cheat. The western farmer is not going to violate the sanctity of his contract, break his pledged word, destroy his bond—just because somebody with an axe to grind and not sufficient understanding to put an edge on it painted a picture a future a picture more dark and painted than the facts warrant."

Egg Timbales.

1 tablespoon butter, 1 tablespoon flour, three-grain corn meal, 5 eggs, half teaspoon baking powder, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, salt and pepper and a few grains of celery salt if you have them.

Make a sauce of butter, flour and water, add your eggs until they add to a souffle. Add parsley, salt and pepper and celery salt. Beat all together, then add the beaten whites to which has been added half a teaspoon of baking powder. Turn the mixture into buttered moulds, place in a pan of water and bake until firm at 350°. This makes six.

WHIPPING CREAM

There is a certain time in a housewife's life when she finds, for just that inability to whip cream successfully. In her opinion, it is always the fault of the cream. The type of whipper is a factor of great importance. An egg beater is not a cream whipper. A turbinette type of whipper has been found to be the most satisfactory. In the turbinette type, the blades revolve at the bottom of the bowl. Cream should be whipped rapidly. Two or three minutes should be a good average. At the right time, for whipping is the first stage of churning. With a little more whipping, the whipped cream will be lumpy with a large amount of milk draining from it. It is not necessary to whip cream just before using it. It can be whipped and stored in a cold place. One of the most important factors of all is temperature. The temperature of the cream at whipping time should be forty degrees, if possible; certainly not above fifty.

Her Two Children Had Summer Complaint

Mrs. J. McDonald, Glace Bay, N.S., writes: "I am the mother of six children, and would not be surprised if you have heard of the 'Dowler's Wild Strawberry' cure. I have a son and a daughter in the house. My two youngest were very sick with summer complaints, and there was nothing that would help them. We have tried most everything, but they could get no relief. Dr. Fowler's made a change in both of them in less than a week."

CHAPTER XXVII

As these two words drew out of the mirror's line of reflection, Grandma tilted her eyes to Jimmy Bennett. She could not speak. Her throat felt pained. Anything she might say would seem inadequate; so it was in silence Jim arose and moved slowly toward the door that led to the room beyond.

"I'll get out the back way," he managed to say huskily. "You tell her I'm gone. I'll be back." After saying this, he turned his back to the girl and went out.

He was too late. Charman was back; her eyes still shining as she gazed in bewilderment from Grandma's troubled countenance to the grim face of her old playmate.

"Where are you going?" she began, putting her hands back to her sides. "I'm going down."

"I've got some news for you. What makes you act so queer?" Then light broke in upon her and she cried: "Look here! Did—did you see—"

Her cheeks flamed, but Jim still stood in the doorway. He might have been a statue. He didn't speak; but Grandma answered shakily: "In—in the mirror, dear! I didn't know you cared that way—other of you, I thought."

"I see," said Charman. She laughed, and going close to Jim, looked at him. "And you thought, too, that I was the only one who knew that you must blame you. It must look that way. That kiss—"

"You don't have to explain a little like that. Charman, just break in again. I'll speak for myself. You're happy, of course; but now—"

Uncle George is waiting for me, and—"

The girl drew an exasperated breath.

"Let him wait," she responded. "You shan't go on step, Jim Bennett. Till I've made you and Grandma understand this thing, Sit down. That this is the way I want you to know you understand. It was a kiss by proxy, so to speak. I want you to know that Carl Carter was really kissing, but a girl who's crossing the ocean, and I'm afraid he's been a little bit too fond of you for ages, though he was too proud to say so; nothing to offer her and—oh, you know that foolish line of thought."

"It's a long story, so long to go into," she mused.

"I'm sorry, but I fear I can't tell you all about it. I'm afraid I'll have to leave out some details. I told him I wouldn't be able to tell him all about it, but he talked him into it."

"I'm sorry that Charman, just break in again. I'll speak for myself. You're happy, of course; but now—"

Uncle George is waiting for me, and—"

"The young man arose with alacrity, as though he had been waiting for Charman to speak. And he had been, though he sat at once. Told him to meet her at the dock with a marriage license! Do you wonder the poor boy was a little off his head? He's been half crazy with anxiety, and—well,"

"You're nothing if not hospitable, Grandma, and I'm glad to have you here to treat us as company."

He stooped to take the old lady's hand in a gentle grip that said, "All's well after all," before he followed Charman to the kitchen.

"The job is done," he commented, glancing about apprehensively. "I suppose I've become accustomed to kitcheneettes; and in these days when most of us don't keep a lot of help, it's a relief that they have stopped coming to the house," Charman. "Come here to look at you."

She smiled and answered: "Are you trying to detect gray hairs? It's a wonder I haven't got some, Jim." Her face clouded suddenly.

"Did Uncle George tell you about—"

"About what?" she prodded as she heard him.

Charman shivered. It had swept over her aching that tomorrow she would be getting supper in a kitchen belonging to some stranger. She lifted her face, and Jim sensed the unspoken terror behind last words.

"I've had to part with the old boy, Jim. It was more than I could swing alone. I sign the papers tomorrow and the boat is mine. I'm not sure that he wouldn't have, though you know, Jim. I've been a sister to him."

"I shouldn't have thought it from all the Wickfield bushy-boys were thinking," replied Charman, "I wasn't having any trouble with him, though I'm not so sure. I've got a reason to whistle it. John is terribly close-mouthed about his own affairs, and I didn't know that the girl loved him. I think it was my imagination to believe that he'd never have done what he had if he hadn't suspected what Wickfield was saying about—us."

"Did he think you were maybe going to tell him?" asked Grandma innocently.

Charman flushed.

"He's not so concealed as all that; but he was quite right to let me know that he's heart's in the hands of the Wickfields. Uncle George didn't tell me about it the day that Moore child ruptured her appendix, but we were interrupted, and a woman or so went by before he had another chance. I saw him all Wickfielded up. He made no secret of it. Some—why she—she—she's a tremendous easy to love."

"Are you sure that her organs is in perfect condition?"

"Instant, I hope," confessed Charman. "Jim, where are you staying?"

"I'm going to stay up here as long as you're here," he said.

"I don't know even that some stranger who took a fancy to the house and asked at the bank if it could be sold," said Uncle George again. Jim. We'll live there and—"

She explained their plans while Jim, staring out of the window to the orchard, listened thoughtfully.

"It was the dear old doctor's scheme," said Charman, "and once we get used to the change it will be all right. Now let's get up to make. Dishes and cake—"

"It was the dear old doctor's scheme," said Charman, "and once we get used to the change it will be all right. Now let's get up to make. Dishes and cake—"

"I'm glad the sun has made a bit. Mother thought I'd taken leave of my senses when I came across him in a coat pocket."

That considering the wealth she was squandering on a fruit stand, she couldn't consistently complain of my extravagance. Then Ama Sophie had a smile on her face, and Sophie a power. She's like my mother, well, with all the angles sandpapered. Do you catch my meaning? You'd love her, anyway. It was worth bearing all this to find an old man like that believe me."

"Was that all you found in California?" queried Charman as she measured flour into a blue bowl. She was referring to the "girl" mentioned in Lizette's letter, but Jim answered in all seriousness.

Jim's Liniment came back as she tied him into the blue suit. He said: "I'm glad the sun has made a bit. Mother thought I'd taken leave of my senses when I came across him in a coat pocket."

UNIFORM LAWS FOR PROVINCES WILL BE SOUGHT

Ottawa, Sept. 3—Renewed efforts to get uniform laws and uniform laws in every province to follow the change in Government at Ottawa.

Some progress in this direction has been made during the past two years but the successes achieved cover a very minor fraction of the laws in which uniformity is considered desirable.

Property, company, insurance laws motor laws, compensation acts and social legislation are all within the scope of statutes in which uniformity is as desirable. It is held, in the interests of the public as of parties immediately concerned.

While it is still law in Quebec, under the Code Napoleon, that has always presented difficulties to national uniformity. Law officers who have studied the subject, however, believe that a great deal more in that direction may be achieved. It is believed that the present situation with Quebec has been enhanced by the other provinces continuing their efforts in the same direction.

Uniformity will, it is claimed,
very materially reduce litigation,
simplify the conduct of inter-provincial business and result in important savings in legal fees by the public.

BRITISH MIGRATION TO CANADA LARGE

Ottawa, Sept. 3—There was a substantial increase in the migration from Great Britain and Northern Ireland to Canada last year according to a statement compiled by the Overseas Settlement Committee of the British Empire.

The Committee ascribes the growth to the beneficial effect of the special ocean rate to Canada for British migrants which was introduced at the beginning of 1929. Last year 65,556 British migrants came to Canada as contrasted with 46,709 in 1928.

The scheme for the settlement of 12,600 families of migrants on farms in Canada, which came into operation in 1924 was completed during 1929. Of the 3,328 families who settled under the scheme, there were

2,704 families on farms at the end of 1929. The last family which had withdrawn from the scheme, 162 are still in agricultural employment and 364 are engaged in other work.

It is claimed that this scheme has been, without doubt, the most successful large-scale enterprise as yet arranged under the empire setting out.

OBITUARY

ELIJ VERNON BLAKE

The death occurred on Tuesday evening, September 2, 1939, of Eli Vernon Blake, at the age of 71 years.

The late Mr. Blake has resided with his son Claude A. Blake, nine miles from Bassano, since 1929.

Increased ill health was suffered by his many friends and neighbors who regretted the passing of a close friend.

The funeral was held from Knox Presbyterian Church, Bassano, on
